前　言

党的二十大擘画了全面建成社会主义现代化强国、实现第二个百年奋斗目标的宏伟蓝图，指明了以中国式现代化全面推进中华民族伟大复兴的发展道路，从“实施科教兴国战略，强化现代化建设人才支撑”的高度，将教育、科技、人才进行统筹部署，并指出以高水平对外开放推动高质量发展，构建人类命运共同体。

面对新形势与新要求，我国高等教育必须全面贯彻党的教育方针，坚持为党育人、为国育才，全面提高人才培养质量，才能开拓教育新局面。作为高等教育的重要组成部分，大学外语教育应与时俱进，立足我国现代化发展全局，深化改革、探索创新，扎根中国、融通中外，为党和国家培养更多高层次国际化人才，讲好中国故事，传播好中国声音，为引领中国更好走向世界、世界更好了解中国作出新贡献。《新视野大学英语》（第四版）系列教材正是在这样的时代背景下设计编写而成。

《新视野大学英语》是一套根据国家高等教育教学质量要求和改革精神、针对全国普通高等院校非英语专业学生编写的通用英语教材。自 2001 年首次出版以来，以其独到的教学理念、创新的教学模式得到高校师生的广泛好评。为服务新时代国家战略发展需求，《新视野大学英语》编写团队认真学习最新政策文件，广泛收集教材使用反馈，持续进行系统的修订与完善。《新视野大学英语》（第四版）在继承原有特色的基础上，深入落实课程思政，全面优化教材设计，深度融合先进技术，进一步提升教材的思想性、科学性与时代性，体现我国高等外语教育发展的新趋势与新要求。

在教学目标上体现课程思政，落实立德树人根本任务

在教学理念上体现“以教师为主导、以学生为主体”

第四版教材依据“以教师为主导、以学生为主体”的教学理念，结合当代大学生的心理特征、学习特点与教师的教学需求，设计讨论式、探究式、项目式等学习活动，提供科学实用、深入浅出的策略讲解。上述设计既有利于学生锤炼语言、提升能力，进行自主学习和合作学习，也便于教师灵活指导，有效组织教学，启发学生深度思考，使教学活动真正调动“教”和“学”的双向主动性与积极性。

College is a unique mix of freedom and responsibility. It is hard to express how profound a change college represents in the lives of new students: new homes, new lifestyles, new people, and a wealth of new learning opportunities. Facing all of these many changes, you must choose responsibly and wisely.

College is a fresh start in your life. You will find your college experience more rewarding if you consider some important questions beforehand: What are your expectations? What does this opportunity offer? How will you make the most of this marvelous opportunity and exciting new experience? How can you prepare yourself to become a useful person to society and the country? What will you do to live up to the expectations for the new era's great young generation, a generation with ideals, a sense of responsibility, grit, and dedication? Listen to your university president, your teachers, and your parents, and see what suggestions they have for you.

Section A

Pre-reading activities

1 Look at the title of Text A. Work in groups and discuss what "a brighter future" means to you. The following are some hints for you to consider.

- Becoming a well-educated person
- Having a good career
- Having a happy family
- Being a useful person to society
- Contributing to the prosperity of the country

2 As a college student, what can you do to prepare yourself for a bright future? The following are some hints for you to consider.

- Work hard
- Keep an open mind
- Study for a larger purpose
- Develop a strong sense of responsibility
- Keep a balance between learning and having fun

Text A

1 Good afternoon! As president of the university, I am proud to welcome you to this university. Your achievement is the triumph of years of hard work, both of your own and of your parents and teachers. Here at the university, we pledge to make your educational experience as rewarding as possible.

2 In welcoming you to the university, I am reminded of my own high school graduation and the photograph my mom took of my dad and me. "Pose naturally," Mom instructed us. "Wait!" said Dad. "Let's take a picture of me handing him an alarm clock." The clock woke me up every morning in college. It is still on my office desk.

3 Let me share with you something that you may not expect. You will miss your old routines and your parents' reminders to work hard and attain your best. You may have cried tears of joy to be finally finished with high school, and your parents may have cried tears of joy to be finally finished with doing your laundry! But know this: The future is built on the strong foundation of the past.

4 For you, these next four years will be a time unlike any other. Here you are surrounded by great resources: interesting students from all over the country, a learned and caring faculty, a comprehensive library, great sports facilities,

Toward a brighter future for all

and student organizations covering every possible interest – from the arts to science, to community service, and so on. You will have the freedom to explore and learn about new subjects. You will learn to get by on very little sleep, meet fascinating people, and pursue new passions. I want to encourage you to make the most of this unique experience, and to use your energy and enthusiasm to reap the benefits of this opportunity.

5 You may feel overwhelmed by the wealth of courses available to you. You will not be able to experience them all, but sample them widely! College offers many things to do and to learn, and each of them offers a different way to see the world. If I could give you only one piece of advice about selecting courses, it would be this: Challenge yourself! Don't assume that you know in advance what fields will interest you the most. Take some courses in fields you have never tried before. You will not only emerge as a more broadly-educated person, but also stand a better chance of discovering an unsuspected passion that will help to shape your future. A wonderful example of this is Leonardo da Vinci, who originally studied painting and sculpture. Over time, Leonardo da Vinci paired his studies in art with his love of science and nature, which made him a famous painter, sculptor, draftsman, engineer, scientist, and architect.

6 Here at the university, it may not always be pleasant to have so many new experiences all at once. In your dorm, the student next door may repeatedly play the one song, which gives you a giant headache. You may be an early bird while your roommate is a night owl. And still, you and your roommate may become best friends. Don't worry if you become a little uncomfortable with some of your new experiences. I promise you that the happy experiences will outweigh the unpleasant ones. And I promise that virtually all of them will provide you with valuable lessons which will enrich your life. So, with a glow in your eyes and a song in your heart, step forward to meet these new experiences!

7 We have confidence that your journey toward self-discovery and your progress toward finding your own passion will yield more than personal advancement. We believe that as you become members of our community of scholars, you will soon come to recognize that with the abundant opportunities for self-enrichment provided by the university, there also come responsibilities. A wise man said: "Education is simply the soul of a society as it passes from one generation to another." You are the inheritors of the hard work of your families and the hard work of many countless others who came before you. They built and transmitted the knowledge you will need to succeed. Now it is your turn. What knowledge will you acquire? What passions will you discover? What will you do to build a strong and prosperous future for the generations that will come after you?

8 We take great pleasure in opening the door to this great step in your journey. We take delight in the many opportunities which you will find, and in the responsibilities that you will carry as citizens of your communities, your country, and the world. Welcome!

Structure analysis

A paragraph with a topic sentence supported by details

A paragraph often starts with a topic sentence, which expresses the main idea of the paragraph. The topic sentence is generally followed by specific details to support and explain the main idea. Sometimes this kind of paragraph may end with a concluding sentence to summarize the paragraph or leave the reader with something to think about.

In Para. 4 of Text A, the topic sentence is "For you, these next four years will be a time unlike any other", followed by specific details to explain the reasons why these four years will be different. This paragraph concludes with the president's encouragement "to make the most of this unique experience, and to use your energy and enthusiasm to reap the benefits of this opportunity".

7 Read Para. 3 of Text A and find the topic sentence, its supporting details, and the concluding sentence.

Let me share with you something that you may not expect. You will miss your old routines and your parents' reminders to work hard and attain your best. You may have cried tears of joy to be finally finished with high school, and your parents may have cried tears of joy to be finally finished with doing your laundry! But know this: The future is built on the strong foundation of the past.

Reading skills

Previewing

Previewing is a useful and important reading strategy. Previewing a text before you read it carefully will help you recognize how information is organized, identify main ideas, and predict what lies ahead in the text. As a result, you will understand the material better. There are four steps to follow when previewing a text.

1 Read the title of the text and the subtitles if there are any. The title and subtitles often reveal the topic or subject of the reading material.
2 Read the first paragraph. The first paragraph is often an introduction to the main idea of the text.
3 Read the last paragraph. The last paragraph usually summarizes the main content of the text, so you can get an idea as to what the author thinks is most important.
4 Read the first sentence of each remaining paragraph. Very likely the first sentence of a paragraph is the topic sentence; in other words, it very likely tells the main idea of that paragraph.

After you finish previewing, you may start reading the text from the beginning to the end. After your first reading, look at the predictions you have made about the text and see how accurate they are.

For example, when you see the title of Text A "Toward a brighter future for all", you may ask yourself some questions and make predictions. The questions may be: What is the text about? Who is the author? Who is the audience?

By reading the first paragraph and the last paragraph, you should be able to answer these questions. The text begins with a greeting "Good afternoon!" and ends with "Welcome!", so it is most likely a speech or a lecture. The first paragraph shows that it is a university president who welcomes first-year students. The last paragraph is about opportunities and responsibilities.

Next, read the first sentences of Paras. 2-7, which very likely tell the main ideas of these paragraphs. After reading the first sentences, you may be able to figure out that the president talks about his high school graduation day, something students may not expect, the unique experience of college life, courses available at the university, some unpleasant new experiences, and his expectations of the students.

By following the above steps and making predictions, you will have a better understanding of the reading material and the author's purpose in writing it.

1 Preview Text B by making predictions about the following questions.

1 What may be the topic of the text?
   A Parents' wishes.
   B A child's wishes.
   C A president's wishes.

2 Who wrote the letter and to whom was it written?
   A A father to his child.
   B A mother to her child.
   C A child to his / her parents.

3 Why did the author write the letter?
   A To tell the child to focus on studying and becoming a scientist.
   B To give advice to the child on how to be sound in mind and body.
   C To show how excited the father was to see his child go to college.

4 Which of the following topics may be discussed in more detail in the text?
   A How to be independent.
   B The importance of good grades.
   C How to make friends in college.
   D How to choose courses in college.
   E College as a very important time in our life.
   F Overcoming homesickness when in college.

2 Now read Text B carefully. Check whether your predictions are accurate or not.

Text B

What we wish

My dear child,

1 You are about to participate in the next leg of your journey through life. For us, this part is bittersweet. As you go off to college, exciting new worlds will open up to you. They will inspire and challenge you; you will grow in incredible ways.

2 This is also a moment of sadness. Your departure to college makes it undeniably clear that you are no longer a child. There has been no greater joy than watching you arrive at this moment. You have turned our greatest challenge into our greatest pride. Although we have brought you to this point, it is hard to watch you depart. Remember above all things, we will miss you.

3 College will be the most important time of your life. It is here that you will truly discover what learning is about. You often ask, "Why do I need to know this?" I encourage you to stay inquisitive, but remember this: "Education is what remains after one has forgotten everything he learned in school." What you learn is not as important as the fact that you learn. This is the heart of scholarship: moving from teacher-taught to master-inspired, on over to the point where you become a self-learner. So, take each subject seriously, and if something doesn't immediately engage you, don't despair. Embrace it as a challenge. Find a way to make it your own.

4 Of course, you must still take care to sign up for courses which stimulate your passion and your intellectual capacity. Don't be bound by what other people think. Steve Jobs said, when you are in college, your passion will create many dots, and later in your life you will connect them. So, don't worry too much about what job you will have; don't be too practical. If you like French or Korean, study it even if someone else tells you that it's not useful. Enjoy picking your "dots". Be assured that one day, you will find your own meaningful career, and you will connect a beautiful curve through those dots.

5 You know that we always want you to do your best, but don't let the pressure of grades get to you. We care only that you try your very best, and that you learn. It is better that your greatest effort earns a lesser grade than that no effort earns you a decent or higher grade. Grades in the end are simply letters fit to give the vain something to boast about, and the lazy something to fear. You are too good to be either. The reward is not the grade but what you learn.

6 More importantly, make friends and trust others. The friends you make in college can be the best ones you will ever have. During these years, when you move into adulthood, the friends you make in college live closer to you than your family. You will form bonds of friendship that will blossom over many decades. Pick friends who are genuine and sincere. Select a few and become truly close to them. Don't worry about their hobbies, grades, or looks. Instead, trust your instincts when you make new friends. You are a genuine and sincere person; anyone would enjoy your friendship. So be confident, secure, and proactive. If you think you like someone, tell them. You have very little to lose. Don't be afraid to trust. Give others the benefit of the doubt, and don't reduce anyone to stereotypes. Nobody is perfect; as long as others are genuine, trust them and be good to them. They will give back.

7 Remember also that your youth is full of strength and beauty, something that you will not comprehend until it is gone. You must guard and cultivate your strength and beauty. A healthy body and a sound mind are the greatest instruments you will ever possess. Enjoy life. Dance if you feel like it. Don't be afraid of what other people think. But also keep yourself safe and sound. Don't let the range of new experiences take your innocence, health, or curiosity away from you. Treasure your youth and the university experience before you.

8 College is the time when you have:
the first taste of independence,
the greatest amount of free time,
the most flexibility to change,
the lowest cost for making mistakes.

9 Approach these years enthusiastically! Make the most of your time. Become the great thinker you were born to be. Let your talents evolve to their fullest potential. Be bold! Experiment! Learn and grow! We are enormously proud that you've made it this far, and we can't wait to see what you will become.

Love,
Your father

Collocation

More language exercises

A collocation is a pair or a group of words that are often used together. These combined words sound natural to native speakers, but learners of English have to make a special effort to learn them because collocations are not always logical or guessable.

Collocations are sometimes tricky for non-native speakers. Does the combination make homework or do mistake sound awkward? Of course! You may probably understand what they mean, but they are definitely not acceptable usage in English.

Read the following email message that Maggie wrote to her friend Jessie. Pay attention to the collocations with the verbs do and make.

To: Jessie

From: Maggie

Hi Jessie,

The first few days as a university student are both interesting and challenging. In the welcome speech, our university president advised us to do our best, just as what my dad has always told me. My dad always encourages me to make the most of my time to enjoy university life. He often reminds me that it is important to make friends at university. Actually, although I'm an early bird and my roommate is a night owl, we have already become good friends.

In addition, the university offers so many courses for students to choose from that I need to make decisions. For disciplines in humanities, we will write a lot of essays. We will also do quite a few research projects in our senior years. For disciplines in engineering, we will need to do many experiments after class. Whatever I am to choose, there will be a huge amount of homework to do.

By the way, do you know how to make a simple breakfast? I want to learn to do some basic cooking.

Love,
Maggie

Teacher: You are welcome to ask professors questions! Professors will be happy to 2) _____ an arrangement to meet you.

3 Student: I hear that students of humanities will need to 3) _____ some research projects.
Teacher: Yes, indeed. And you will love it!

4 Student: By the way, can I cook in our dormitory?
Teacher: Yes, you can 4) _____ a simple breakfast. Your dormitory is equipped with necessary facilities for you to 5) _____ some basic cooking, like heating milk or toasting bread.

5 Student: I know we should make every effort in our studies. The problem is sometimes we don't have enough time.
Teacher: That might be true. But you'll have to 6) _____ your best. Just as our president said in his speech: Make the most of your time!

Stories of China

The post-00s looking forward to a colorful life

Stuffed toys (毛绒玩具), guitars, swimming suits, hometown snacks, and books – with these items packed in their luggage, China's post-00s long for a colorful college life.

Zhang Yueru is one of the post-00s. Majoring in photoelectric (光电的) information science and engineering, she plans to join clubs on traditional Chinese culture. "I like ancient poetry," she said. "Many post-00s enjoy traditional Chinese cultural activities, such as wearing traditional clothing, reciting ancient poems, and taking photos in an ancient Chinese style. I'm sure I can find quite a few friends who share my interests."

Liang Yixin, a biotechnology major, is looking for a dance club. "I have always loved dancing. I'd like to join a dance club in college to improve my dancing and make friends," she said.

Many of the post-00s have had various art classes since early childhood, such as piano, violin, dancing, and painting. “The post-00s really know much more than we post-80s,” said Zhao Fengjiao, a university teacher.

Although they spend a lot of time on their hobbies and interests, the post-00s pay more attention to their studies. Sun Beibei, a university counselor ( 辅导员 ), receives many calls from students who want to know what they need to prepare for their university studies before the semester begins. “They really care about their studies,” Sun said.

According to a survey, 89.4 percent of the surveyed post-00s think that success depends on hard work. Yang Jingpei, a freshman who comes from a family of farmers, aims to reduce his parents’ workload through his study of agricultural mechanization and automation.

“We, the post-00s, have access to the Internet at an early age and are full of imagination. I believe I can make farmers’ jobs easier,” Yang said.

In Wang Leshan’s case, she plans to become a volunteer to teach in remote areas in Gansu Province. “Our senior schoolmates have been doing this for more than 10 years, and we post-00s should carry it on,” Wang said.

The family is the basic unit of society and our first school where we can learn the core values of life. The relationship between parents and children can be one of the most challenging and yet the most important of all. The child must pass through the many changes of childhood and adolescence before stepping into the role of an adult. Imagine how difficult it can be for your parents to change, too! Changing, learning, and growing, each generation marches through these stages in life and the eternal love between parents and children is ever present. There are moments when the love between parents and children is felt so strongly that time seems to slow down.

Think about your own parents and the love you share with them. Can you recall some special moments when you felt especially close to your parents? How will you honor the love you have received from your family? What can you do to keep a close relationship with your parents?

Text A

1 I watch her back her new truck out of the driveway. The vehicle is too large, too expensive. She'd refused to consider a practical car with good gas efficiency and easy to park. It's because of me, I think. She bought it to show me that she could.

2 "I'm 18," she'd told me so often that my teeth ached. "I am an adult!"

3 I thought, is that true? Just yesterday you watched some cartoons. What changed between yesterday and today?

4 Today she's gone, off to be an adult far away from me. I'm glad she's gone. It means she made it, and that I'm finally free of 18 years of responsibilities. And yet I wonder if she could take good care of herself.

5 She left a mess. Her bathroom is an embarrassment of damp towels, hair in the sink, and nearly empty tubes of toothpaste. I bring a box of big black garbage bags upstairs. Eye shadow, face cream, nail polish – all go into the trash. I dump drawers, sweep shelves clear, and clean the sink. When I am finished, it is as neat and impersonal as a hotel bathroom.

6 In her bedroom I find mismatched socks under her bed and purple pants on the closet floor. Desk drawers are filled with school papers, filed by year and subject. I catch myself reading through poems and essays, admiring high scores on tests, and reading her name, printed or typed neatly in the upper right-hand corner of each paper. I pack

A child's clutter awaits an adult's return

the desk contents into a box. Six months, I think. I will give her six months to collect her belongings, and then I will throw them all away. That is fair. Grown-ups pay for storage.

7 I have to pause at the books. Comic books, teen fiction, romantic novels, historical novels, and textbooks. Each book beloved. I want to be practical and stuff them in paper sacks for the used bookstore. But I love books as much as she does, so I stack them onto a single bookshelf to deal with later.

8 I go for her clothes. Dresses, sweaters, and shoes she hasn't worn since seventh grade are placed into garbage bags. I am a plague of locusts emptying the closet. Two piles grow to clumsy heights: one for charity, the other trash.

9 There are more shoes, stuffed animals, large and small posters, hair bands, and pink hair curlers. The job grows larger the longer I am at it. How can one girl collect so much in only 18 years?

10 I stuff the garbage bags until the plastic strains. I haul them down the stairs, two bags at a time. Donations to charity go into the trunk of my car; trash goes to the curb. I'm earning myself sweat and sore shoulders.

11 She left the bedroom a ridiculous mess, the comforter on the floor, the sheets tossed aside. I strip off the comforter, blanket, sheets, and pillows. Once she starts feeding coins into laundry machines, she'll appreciate the years of clean clothes I've provided for free.

12 I will turn her room into a crafts room. Or create the fancy guest room I've always wanted.

13 I turn the bed over. A large brown envelope is marked "DO NOT THROW AWAY". I open it. More papers. I dump the contents onto the floor. There are old family photographs, letters, greeting cards, and love notes from us to her. There are comics clipped from newspapers and magazines. Every single item in this envelope has passed from our hands to hers. These are all things that we gave her. Suddenly, I feel very emotional.

14 "DO NOT THROW AWAY".

15 My kid – my clutter bug – knows me too well. As I read through the cards and notes, I think maybe the truck wasn't such a bad idea, after all. Maybe it helps her to feel less small in a big world.

16 I reverse myself and bring back the garbage bags from the car and the curb. Clothes and shoes go back into the closet. I remake the bed and pile it with stuffed animals. My husband comes home and calls up the stairs.

17 "Just straightening up," I tell him. "Can you find some boxes for her stuff?"

18 He brings up boxes from the basement.

19 "She left a mess," he says.

20 "I don't mind," I reply. Silence.

21 Then he says softly, "She's not coming back." I feel my throat tighten at the sadness in his voice. I try hard to keep back my tears.

22 My little baby, my dependent child, isn't coming back. But someday my daughter, the independent woman, will return home. Tokens of her childhood will await her. So will we, with open arms.

Structure analysis and writing

Structure analysis

A paragraph of problem-solution pattern

In Text A, the author tells us how the mother changes her attitude toward her daughter while cleaning up her daughter's mess. From Para. 5 to Para. 11, the author describes how messy the daughter's room is (Problem, plus details of the problem), how the mother manages to clean up the mess (Solution), what the result of her effort is, and how she feels about the result (Evaluation). In other words, these paragraphs are written either in the problem-solution pattern or in the problem-solution-evaluation pattern.

Now look at Para. 5 and the structure analysis.

| Problem | She left a mess. Her bathroom is an embarrassment |
| Details of the problem | of damp towels, hair in the sink, and nearly empty tubes of toothpaste. I bring a box of big black |
| Solution | garbage bags upstairs. Eye shadow, face cream, nail polish – all go into the trash. I dump drawers, sweep shelves clear, and clean the sink. When I am finished, |
| Evaluation | it is as neat and impersonal as a hotel bathroom. |

7 Read Para. 11 of Text A and analyze the problem-solution pattern.

She left the bedroom a ridiculous mess, the comforter on the floor, the sheets tossed aside. I strip off the comforter, blanket, sheets, and pillows. Once she starts feeding coins into laundry machines, she'll appreciate the years of clean clothes I've provided for free.

Structured writing

- Tell stories to young children.

Evaluation
All these will contribute to a better relationship with your children.

Some parents find it challenging to keep a good relationship with their children. They do not know what activities to do or what topics to talk about with their children. Here are a few useful tips. Having a family trip is a wonderful way for all family members to bond with each other. And you and your children can do fun things together, such as playing football or watching their favorite show. Another very good activity to bond with your young children is storytelling. You can tell them the stories you heard from your parents or grandparents or stories about your childhood. All these will contribute to a better relationship with your children.

8 Write a paragraph of no less than 100 words on one of the following topics. The first topic has an outline that you can follow.

Topic

What to do if your parents and you disagree about your career goals

Problem

Reading skills

Reading in thought groups

Studies have shown that when you read, your eyes must make small stops to focus on a word or a group of words. Poor readers usually make many more stops as they move their eyes from word to word instead of from word group to word group. This habit will not only slow down the reading speed, but also cause difficulty in comprehension.

In order to understand what you are reading, you must read for ideas. An idea is seldom contained in a single word, but rather in a group of words. Try to read in phrases, and then treat each of them as one thought group. In other words, you read from thought group to thought group. This will not only increase your reading speed, but also improve your comprehension.

Read Para. 5 of Text A word by word. You will find that your reading speed is slow and the meaning is not clear when you read in words rather than thought groups.

She left a mess. Her bathroom is an embarrassment of damp towels, hair in the sink, and nearly empty tubes of toothpaste. I bring a box of big black garbage bags upstairs. Eye shadow, face cream, nail polish – all go into the trash. I dump drawers, sweep shelves clear, and clean the sink. When I am finished, it is as neat and impersonal as a hotel bathroom.

Now read the same paragraph in thought groups. You will find that you are reading faster and the ideas are clearer.

She left a mess. / Her bathroom / is an embarrassment / of damp towels, / hair in the sink, / and nearly empty tubes of toothpaste. / I bring a box / of big black garbage bags / upstairs. / Eye shadow, / face cream, / nail polish – / all go into the trash. / I dump drawers, / sweep shelves clear, / and clean the sink. / When I am finished, / it is / as neat and impersonal / as a hotel bathroom.

Reading in thought groups is a necessary skill if you are to become an efficient reader. By reading for ideas and in thought groups, you will gradually make fewer eye stops and increase your reading speed. With practice, this reading skill will come naturally.

1 Read Para. 12 of Text B and mark off the thought groups.

"All right," he says, and carries the smelly package. As we walk back, he tells me about migrations of eels to the Sargasso Sea: how eels come down Dalmatian rivers and swim across the Mediterranean and then the whole Atlantic, until they reach the warm Sargasso Sea. Here they lay their eggs, and then the baby eels swim back to the native rivers of their parents.

Text B

Time slows down

1 "Daddy, let's take a walk."

2 It's an April day in Virginia. He nods, puts his hands on the arms of his wheelchair, whispers something that makes little sense. I try to help him up, but he is too heavy and limp.

3 "Come for a walk, and then – I've brought you a surprise."

4 The white curtains surge in the breeze.

5 Shivering, he complains it's chilly. "It's cold, I'm tired. Can't we go home now?"

6 Suddenly we're far away in a time long past in part of a harbor I've never seen before. December, Chicago, I'm five, and cold. One glove is lost. My feet are tired. His legs are longer; he strides quickly through melting snow, toward buildings like airplane sheds with immense doors.

7 This is the most exciting place I have ever been to. Suddenly my fatigue is gone. I could walk along here forever, at least until I find out how to get aboard one of the boats.

8 We slow down our pace. Smaller sheds now. A green diner. Smells of fish and smoke. We enter a little hut. Barrels of salty water, string bags of shellfish, bundles of fish laid out on ice.

9 "Daddy, look at that snake!"

10 "No, that's an eel," says Daddy. "Smoked. We'll take a portion home for supper."

11 "I certainly won't eat that!"

12 "All right," he says, and carries the smelly package. As we walk back, he tells me about migrations of eels to the Sargasso Sea: how eels come down Dalmatian rivers and swim across the Mediterranean and then the whole Atlantic, until they reach the warm Sargasso Sea. Here they lay their eggs, and then the baby eels swim back to the native rivers of their parents.

13 Back at last in the apartment, he unwraps the eel, opens his pocket knife, and slices carefully.

14 "I won't eat it," I say suspiciously.

15 "Try one bite, just for me."

16 "I won't like it."

17 While he hangs up our coats, I test one pinch. Smelly, smoky, and salty.

18 He goes into the kitchen to heat milk for me and tea for himself. I test another pinch. Then another. He returns with the steaming cups.

19 The eel has vanished.

20 Because it is Sunday and I am five, he forgives me. Time slows down and the love flows in – father to daughter and back again.

21 At 19, I fly out to Japan. My father and I climb Mount Fuji. High above the Pacific, and hours up the slope, we picnic on dried eel, seaweed crackers, and cold rice wrapped in the eel skin. He reaches the peak first.

22 As the years stretch, we walk along waterways all over the world. With his long strides, he often overtakes me. I've never known anyone with such energy.

23 Some days, time flies with joy all around. Other days, time rots like old fish.

24 Today in the nursing home in Virginia, anticipating his reluctance, I beg boldly and encourage him, "Please, Daddy, just a little walk. You are supposed to exercise."

25 He can't get out of his chair. Not that he often gets up on his own, but once in a while he'll suddenly have a surge of strength. I stoop to lift his feet from the foot restraints, fold back the metal pieces which often scrape his delicate, paper-thin skin. "Come, now you can stand."

26 He grips the walker and struggles forward. Gradually I lift and pull him to his feet. Standing unsteadily, he sways and then gains his balance.

27 "See, you made it! That's wonderful! All right, I'll be right behind you, my hand in the small of your back. Now – forward, march!"

28 He is impatient with the walker as I accompany him to the dining room. I help him to his chair, and hand him a spoon. It slips from his fingers. Pureed tuna is heaped on a plastic plate. I encourage him, sing him old songs, tell stories, but he won't eat. When I lift a spoonful of gray fishy stuff to his mouth, he says politely, "I don't care for any."

29 Nor would I.

30 Then I take the small smelly package covered in white wrapping paper from a plastic bag. He loves presents, and he reaches forward with awkward fingers to try to open it. The smell fills the room.

31 "Look, Daddy, they've been out of it for months, but at last this morning at the fish seller near the Potomac, I found some smoked eel."

32 We unwrap it, and then I take out the pocket knife my beloved aunt gave me "for safekeeping", and slice the silvery flesh.

33 "What a beautiful picnic," my father beams.

34 He takes a sip of his champagne, and then with steady fingers picks up a slice of eel and downs it easily. Then another, and another, until he eats the whole piece. And again, time slows down and the love flows in – daughter to father and back again.

Stories of China

Bonds of love

The moment I entered our old family house during the recent holiday break, I was overwhelmed by a strong feeling of nostalgia ( 怀旧 ).

My bedroom appeared exactly as I remembered it when I moved out. On the neatly ironed white bedsheet was my favorite childhood toy, a silly-looking monkey with incredibly long arms. I opened my bedside drawer. My large pack of colorful origami paper ( 折纸 ), along with half-finished paper cranes ( 纸鹤 ), was tidily kept in a box, carefully sealed up by my mom. Even the pair of old scissors I once used to cut paper flowers was kept with the set.

Several years ago, I excitedly journeyed halfway around the world from Nanjing, China, to London, the U.K., in pursuit of further studies. It was only upon my recent return, at a more mature age, that I realized my teenage decision was also driven by a longing for independence from the protective shelter of home.

In recent years, reports about strict Asian parenting often make headlines. Some of my friends in London say that they feel sorry for me for what they imagine to be the strict upbringing I must have endured. I laugh as I reflect on how misleading these assumptions have been. Knowing the importance of education in Chinese culture, I understand why some parents set high academic standards for their children.

The honest truth is, my mother would scold me when I was lazy with my piano practice or left important school assignments unfinished until the night before the deadline. But these scoldings were just a drop in the ocean of the precious mother-daughter moments we spent together – jogging on the beach, trying out new food, and traveling the world.

As China becomes increasingly cosmopolitan (国际性的), younger generations of parents are adopting ever more diverse parenting strategies to shape their children into well-rounded individuals. The old stereotype of strict parents really just doesn't apply anymore.

It may have taken me a decade to realize this, but I suddenly feel lucky to have grown up in a family with strict, loving parents. The beautiful memories and close emotional bonds between my parents and me will remain my greatest asset for life.

Heroes of our time

I think a hero is any person really intent on making this a better place for all people.

— Maya Angelou
(American poet)

Preview

The stories of heroes inspire and encourage us. Sometimes, courageous people are called heroes when they achieve great things. Other times, however strong their will is, they fail to achieve their goal. Can they be considered heroes even if their efforts fail?

What makes a hero? Some say heroes have special qualities that ordinary people can never acquire. Some say the main ingredient of a hero is the determination to do what is best and to serve those in need. In fact, those who dedicate their whole life to helping people around the world and those who rush to help people around them in the face of danger can both be called heroes. There are famous heroes, and there are everyday heroes. You too can be one of the ordinary people who do extraordinary things! What will you do to become more courageous? How will you strengthen your own abilities and determination to serve the people and society?

Text A

1 He was wandering in a rice field of dreams. The plants were taller than a man. Their ears hung full as brooms, and each grain was as big as a peanut. After walking a while he lay down in the leaf-shade, quite hidden. A rest was a good idea, because the wonder-plants went on and on.

2 Then Yuan Longping woke up, laughing. The rice plants, which he had tended for decades in Anjiang and then Changsha in Hunan Province, sowing and nurturing them, visiting daily on his motorbike to inspect them, were not quite there yet. But they still deserved their name of super rice. The leaves were straighter and taller than ordinary ones, and the grains plumper. They had all the vigor of the wild strain that he and his team had found in Hainan in 1970 and had crossbred with the domesticated variety. Some skeptical people told him he was wasting his time, since rice was a self-pollinator. He believed that crossbreeding was universal and that it always made the offspring stronger.

3 The figures spoke for themselves. With his new hybrid rice the annual yield was 20% higher. This meant that at least 70 million more people could be fed every year. China's rice yield had risen from 57 million tons in 1950 to 208 million in 2022,

TO FEED THE WORLD

transforming China from food deficiency to food security. Higher rice yields allowed farmers to turn more land to other uses – fruit, vegetables, fishponds – so that people not only had more to eat, but ate well. And this message was for China as well as the world. He traveled across Asia and to Africa and America to help people grow rice, as well as inviting his foreign peers to China to share his research. A fifth of all rice grown globally now comes from hybrids that were his.

4 For this Yuan Longping won the Medal of the Republic, China's highest state honor, and the World Food Prize. He was widely known as the Father of Hybrid Rice, and even an asteroid was named after him. Although he was famous, he chose to stay away from the spotlight and devoted himself to rice growing. His face was leathered by the sun and his big hands were rough from "playing in the mud" all day. He was far happier in his short-sleeved work shirts, out in his rice field, than in a suit in some conference hall. As an official of the World Food Prize Foundation said, Professor Yuan was incredibly humble. He never sought fame or adulation, but rather focused only on hard work and results that could help eradicate poverty and lift people out of hunger.

5 Yuan Longping was born in Beijing, but he enjoyed the countryside and the thought of growing tasty things. Inspired by his initial interest, he decided to study agriculture in college. After graduation, Yuan Longping took a job as a teacher in Anjiang Agricultural School. He said, "Having enough food was people's priority."

6 Yuan Longping had at first worked on grafting. He grafted moonflowers on sweet potatoes, tomatoes on potatoes, and a watermelon on a pumpkin, but found that any inherited traits vanished in the second generation. Then he read about plant genetics, and turned his full attention to China's staple, rice.

7 As a boy he was fascinated by the deliciousness of Xiaozhan Rice from Tianjin, said to be the best in China at that time. Around Anjiang, what the farmers wanted was quantity: miracle-yields from their fields. They would cross the mountains to get better seeds, so he did the same, traveling around China to find the strong wild male-sterile plants he needed. Once he found them, it took three years to perfect the hybridizing and another three to get his super rice into commercial production. Then, in a steep curve, yields soared away.

8 He kept on working to make rice better: salt-tolerant to grow by the coast, crossbred with corn to be more nutritious, enriched with vitamin A to improve people's eyesight. His mind was filled with the thought that if just half of the rice fields in the world were planted with his hybrid rice, an increase in yield of two tons per hectare would feed 400-500 million more people every year. And he still talked of plants taller than a man.

9 Outside the funeral home in Changsha on the day after his death, crowds came to lay a mountain of yellow and white chrysanthemums. Several of the mourners said that whenever they sat down to a meal, or merely smelled the fragrance of rice, they would remember "Grandfather Yuan". Among the flowers were the traditional bowls of boiled rice, the best thing to commemorate the Father of Hybrid Rice.

Culture notes

World Food Prize: an international award recognizing the achievements of individuals who have advanced human development by improving the quality, quantity, or availability of food in the world. Since 1987, the prize has been awarded annually and it is now administered by the World Food Prize Foundation.

A paragraph with statistics

Statistics refer to a set of numbers which represent facts or measurements. They can be used to describe the characteristics of the subject or to make predictions about what will happen. Statistics can be presented in many different forms, including numbers of measurements, dates, percentages, ratios, proportions, and fractions. Statistics are powerful pieces of evidence that can add factual weight to an argument and effectively strengthen it. Therefore, they are often used to convince the reader to accept an argument.

Look at Para. 3 of Text A. It contains statistics to support and prove the main idea, i.e., "The figures spoke for themselves." All the statistics are used to describe and prove the success of Yuan Longping's hybrid rice.

The figures spoke for themselves. With his new hybrid rice the annual yield was 20% higher. This meant that at least 70 million more people could be fed every year. China's rice yield had risen from 57 million tons in 1950 to 208 million in 2022, transforming China from food deficiency to food security. Higher rice yields allowed farmers to turn more land to other uses – fruit, vegetables, fishponds – so that people not only had more to eat, but ate well. And this message was for China as well as the world. He traveled across Asia and to Africa and America to help people grow rice, as well as inviting his foreign peers to China to share his research. A fifth of all rice grown globally now comes from hybrids that were his.

Prediction

Description

Description

7 Read Para. 8 of Text A and underline the sentence(s) with statistics. Identify whether the statistics are used for description or prediction, and what types of statistics are presented.

He kept on working to make rice better: salt-tolerant to grow by the coast, crossbred with corn to be more nutritious, enriched with vitamin A to improve people's eyesight. His mind was filled with the thought that if just half of the rice fields in the world were planted with his hybrid rice, an increase in yield of two tons per hectare would feed 400-500 million more people every year. And he still talked of plants taller than a man.

Statistic 3 Ratio of female to male computer science students: 1:7 in 2012; 1:3 in 2022

Conclusion
The number of female computer science students was growing while that of male computer science students remained steady.

A survey was conducted on the number of male and female students studying computer science at this university between the years of 2012 and 2022. The number of male students studying computer science fell slightly from 4,800 in 2012 to 4,500 in 2017, and then remained steady through the following five years. Although the number of female students majoring in computer science was rather low to begin with, at about 700 in 2012, it grew to 1,500 in 2022. In 2012, the ratio of female students to male students majoring in computer science was about 1:7, but in 2022 the ratio was 1:3. To sum up, at this university the number of female computer science students was growing while that of male computer science students remained steady during the decade.

Reading skills

Scanning

Scanning is a technique used in reading to gather specific information in a text by going through it rapidly. In most cases, you know what you are looking for, so you are concentrating on finding some particular information. The most familiar way of scanning you may have experienced is reading menus or posters or looking up words in a dictionary.

Scanning involves moving your eyes quickly down the page to seek specific words or phrases. The key to scanning is to locate useful information quickly. Here are some tips:

1 When scanning, you should have a clear idea of what you are looking for, think of questions, and look for answers.
2 Do not read every word.
3 Watch for definitions, highlighted words, especially words in italics or bold print.
4 Spot dates and names.
5 Look for numbers, letters, or signal words such as first, second, next.
6 Look for repeated words or phrases.

I Scan Text B for answers to the following questions.

1 Who gave his own life to save his wife?
2 Who was honored by over 11,000 people in Toronto, Canada?
3 For how many years was Nelson Mandela kept in jail?
4 Who founded the association Share the Road?
5 Which noun is repeated the most throughout the text?

Heroes among us

1 Who's a hero these days? In an era of heightened heroism, the word hero has become more common. We use hero to describe both victims and survivors of all kinds of difficulties and tragedies. Who are the heroes among us?

2 In the days subsequent to a mass shooting in Tucson, Arizona, many described Dory Stoddard as a hero. Dory gave his life for his wife, Mavy. When Dory heard shots ring out, he immediately fell on top of his wife to shield her from the hail of bullets. At the memorial service, the priest said, "Dory didn't die a hero; he lived a hero." Long known for his remarkable spirit and love of humanity, Dory Stoddard died as he had always lived, assisting others.

3 Dory Stoddard was a civilian hero, who acted instinctively with courage and grace when caught up in extraordinary circumstances. But what about first responders, whose job is, in the words of the widow of a fallen police officer, to "rush toward danger"?

4 In Toronto, Canada, downtown life stopped when more than 11,000 police officers and other emergency responders marched solemnly through the streets to honor Sergeant Ryan Russell, a 35-year-old "good man and good cop", who believed deeply in his commitment to protect and serve. Sgt. Russell moved quickly to protect others from harm. He tried to stop a drunk driver in a stolen snowplow with only his police automobile and his goodwill to help others. Sadly, Sgt. Russell was unable to stop the drunk driver and was killed in the effort.

5 It used to be that the word hero was reserved for those who performed acts of distinct courage beyond the call of duty. A soldier who runs through gunfire to rescue other military personnel is seen as a hero. So are larger-than-life leaders such as Nelson Mandela, who emerged after 27 years of jail, confined in a solitary chamber. He made the choice not to be bitter, and worked hard as South Africa's first black president to establish harmony and helped society reconcile its conflicted past.

6 But today, our heroes are average men and women, "everyday heroes" to whom we can relate, people like us.

7 However, while many people honor Sgt. Russell, some people raise this question when they try to make sense of a tragedy like Sgt. Russell's: Some first responders do not succeed in helping others and they get injured or die in their efforts. Do these people become heroes because of what happens to them as they try to help others – instead of what they actually make happen?

8 I asked road safety advocate Eleanor McMahon whether she thought Sgt. Russell was a hero. Ms. McMahon's late husband, a police officer, was killed by a drunk truck driver in a 2006 off-duty cycling accident. Through grief and rage, Ms. McMahon founded Share the Road, a cycling association, and worked tirelessly until the government established "Greg's Law", legislation that gave authority to the police to immediately seize the automobiles of drunk drivers caught on the road.

9 Ms. McMahon replied that she thought Sgt. Russell was indeed a hero. "Just imagine, in the middle of an intense snowstorm this policeman thinks: I've got to stop this snowplow before it hurts others." Ms. McMahon summed up why she considered many police officers to be heroes: "It's natural to be afraid of danger. It's natural for that fear to cause most people to rush toward safety and away from danger. Heroes do just the opposite. They rush toward danger to help those in need."

10 We count on first responders to rush toward danger, especially when it involves us or those we love. We expect nothing less. So when one of them dies doing that, we should recognize the heroic action even though we may doubt our own capacity to be heroic ourselves.

11 The inspiring stories of heroes help remind us that ordinary people can do extraordinary things, whether it is in the fulfillment of their duties or as part of everyday life. We honor the fireman, the policeman, and the average citizen by recognizing their heroism. Perhaps, even more importantly, we honor them by working to change the circumstances that led to their death. By honoring them we can be inspired by them. Will we be heroes when circumstances call on us to act heroically? Hopefully, we will!

Culture notes

Nelson Mandela: nationalist and the first black president of South Africa (1994-1999). He helped end the country's racial segregation and achieve a peaceful shift to majority rule. Mandela was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in 1993.

Share the Road: a cycling association established in 2008 by Eleanor McMahon in memory of her husband Sergeant Greg Stobbart and to advocate road safety.

Stories of China

Cering Dandar, a grassroots hero

Tons of waste is being left on Mount Qomolangma (珠穆朗玛峰) by growing numbers of visitors, and it needs cleaning up. A dedicated and daring team will tackle the task when the climbing season ends in May. Garbage collection on Qomolangma requires two to three years of training, according to Cering Dandar (次仁旦达), a mountaineer and guide.

"Just picking up a single ring-pull (易拉罐的拉环) at over 7,000 meters could be a matter of life or death!" he said. He once spent a whole day moving through the ice just to pick up two oxygen tanks and a plastic bag. Falling into one of the crevasses (裂缝) has become his worst nightmare.

Cering is one of China's first Tibetan climbing guides. He has climbed the highest summits on the seven continents and hiked to the North and South poles. He has a master's degree in media and communications, and was the cameraman when the Beijing Olympic torch reached the top of Qomolangma in 2008. He has been to the summit four times. Cering first noticed trash scattered on the mountain during his first ascent (攀登) in 2006. "Cans, chocolate, oxygen tanks, tents, and sleeping bags. Their colors just don't belong here where everything should be white and blue."

In 2018, Cering helped found the Mount Qomolangma environment team. By the end of the year, the team had carried out three major clean-ups above 5,200 meters. They had collected more than 5,000 kg of food garbage, 1,000 kg of climbing equipment, and more than 2,000 kg of feces ( 排泄物 ). Every year, they have to do this all over again.

Avalanches ( 雪崩 ), blizzards ( 暴风雪 ), altitude sickness – working on Qomolangma is one of the most dangerous jobs on earth. Above 6,500 meters, only professional mountaineers like Cering can do the job, and at above 7,000 meters, even professional climbers face physical limits. Any unnecessary movement is risky and can cause death.

For his persistent efforts, Cering Dandar was honored by Xinhua News Agency with an award as one of the 10 inspiring role models and grassroots heroes on the Internet of 2018. "In Tibet, we have the bluest skies and highest mountains," Cering said. "If I could choose again, I would still become a guardian of the holy mountain."

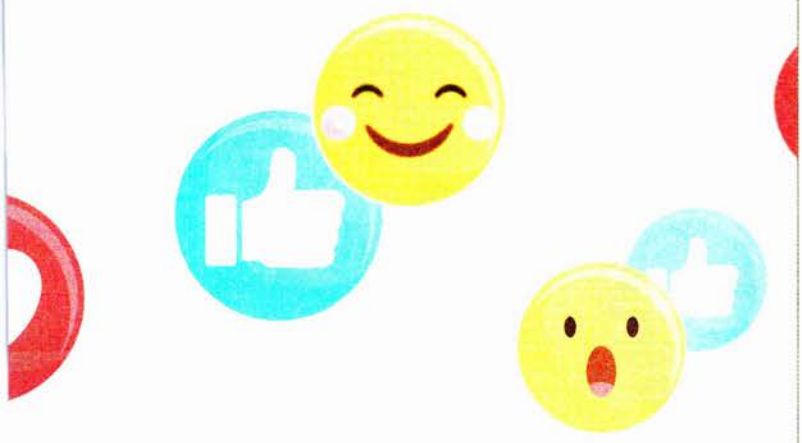
Is social media a good thing or a bad thing? This may be the most frequently asked question about social media. No doubt, social media has fundamentally changed the way people live. It offers quick access to information, provides a convenient and efficient means of connecting with friends and family, and presents educational opportunities previously unavailable. For many, it is hard to imagine a day without social media.



However, social media may also pose challenges, including addiction, depression, and cyberbullying. Parents should watch closely what their children are doing and how much time they spend on social media. Perhaps we should also ask ourselves these questions: How much social media is too much? Are we spending too much time on it? How can we use social media in a responsible and civilized way to enjoy the benefits while avoiding its negative effects? How can we take advantage of social media to promote responsible behavior and a positive life attitude?

Section A

Pre-reading activities

Work in small groups and discuss the following questions.

1 How much time do you spend on social media every day? What do you do with social media?

2 Which of the following uses of social media is most important to you? Why?

- Expressing yourself
- Promoting something
- Connecting and communicating
- Gaining knowledge and information
- Recording and sharing important moments in life

3 What may be the negative effects when social media is overused? What can you do to avoid the negative effects?

Text A

1 "I hate you!" the wild-eyed teenage girl shouted as she kicked her father before biting his arm. This was the second time that week that Zoey had flown into a violent rage because her parents had taken away her access to social media.

2 At our psychiatric clinic, when her parents, David and Amanda, came to enlist our help for her sake, they described Zoey as a sweet, happy girl and a good student. She loved playing soccer, hiking, and taking mountain bike rides with her dad. David and Amanda, supportive parents with college degrees and their own tech business, were startled by Zoey's social media addiction. "It all started after she came home in seventh grade with a notebook the school had given her," they said. This brand-new computer, provided for classwork, contained many online chat apps.

3 Soon they noticed Zoey was devoting her late-night hours to chat rooms and seemed fascinated by videos and online games. Their daughter changed from a sweet, innocent child who enjoyed spending time with them into a rude, angry terror. Her academic performance declined, and sadly, she ended up needing psychiatric treatment.

4 Given that the teenage years are a time of dramatic change for most kids, Zoey may have been headed for trouble with or without social media. It's also true that many students use social media responsibly without compromising their health or school performance. However, growing evidence shows that social media impacts some human needs, and absorption in the digital world can generate a number of psychological problems – from addiction to depression. Young people are especially in danger of a breakdown.

5 One human need considerably impacted by social media is social connection. No doubt, social connection is an essential part of being human and also a significant factor contributing to happiness and health. Thanks to social media, we are the most connected society ever in history. Worldwide, approximately 3.5 million emails are sent per second. Predictably, the younger you are, the more you text. Yet the rise of social media is problematic, for it goes along with an apparent decline in mental health. More people have reported symptoms of being depressed in recent years than in the 1980s. Today's teens, in particular, are more likely to have trouble sleeping and more likely to need a professional for their mental health problems.

6 Certainly, numerous other factors may be driving this trend, but preliminary research links depression with social media usage. A University of Houston study found that the more time college students spent posting and chatting online, the greater the chance they would experience mild depression. The researchers attributed this to something called social comparison. When we compare ourselves to others online, it hurts our self-confidence. We think everyone is doing better than we are. But this is misleading since other people usually post only their successes and good news.

7 It has also been discovered that spending too much time online is interfering with or even causing withdrawal from face-to-face encounters. That is troubling because we know that we can get physically and psychologically ill if cut off from human influence. We improve our emotional state largely through being out in society. Not getting the right kind of human contact and support at key developmental periods of childhood may lead to serious emotional and psychological problems.

8 Another basic need impacted by social media is the need for novelty. Our human brain is biologically prepared for novelty, which, in turn, has helped us survive disastrous environmental change. Unfortunately, this natural thirst can become obsessive in the information age, in which every post, text, email, and online photograph is an opportunity to experience something new. As with an ardent chocolate lover at a candy store, the many choices are too stimulating, even exhausting.

9 Social media, which feeds our needs for connection and novelty, risks causing social problems and also undermining people's mental health. If kids develop compulsive texting and social media habits, like Zoey, they can suffer badly. It's high time that educators and families rethought how to change the extent to which we expose our children to social media. As for David and Amanda, they would do anything to have their sweet, loving Zoey back.

Structure analysis

A paragraph of listing

In Text A the author uses the pattern of listing to explain the impacts of social media on some human needs. A paragraph in the pattern of listing usually starts with a topic sentence, followed by pieces of information listed one after another. This pattern can also be applied to a set of paragraphs. Paras. 6-7 of Text A are a case in point. Look at these two paragraphs and see how the listing pattern is used.

The listing pattern starts with the topic sentence in Para. 6: "Certainly, numerous other factors may be driving this trend, but preliminary research links depression with social media usage." This sentence suggests that the author is going to present some research findings about the link between social media usage and depression. Para. 6 lists one finding using the expression "A University of Houston study found that ...", and Para. 7 lists another finding using the expression "It has also been discovered that ...". The two paragraphs are connected by the signal word also in the first sentence of Para. 7. Through listing, the author presents his ideas in an orderly way so that the reader can easily follow his thoughts. There are many other signal words to mark listing such as one, another, first, second, finally, furthermore, in addition (to), additionally, and moreover.

Anxiety may cause a number of problems, but there are several things you can do to overcome it. First, do exercise regularly. Jogging, swimming, or cycling can reduce anxiety and improve your mood. Second, listen to music, especially soft music. Soft music can slow your pulse and heart rate, and distract you from your worries. Third, write things down when feeling stressed. Many studies have shown that writing down negative thoughts on paper may help people get rid of tension and stress. You may keep writing until you can't think of anything to write. Then you may tear up the paper and throw it away. Most importantly, connect with family and friends. Being socially connected can increase feelings of happiness and decrease loneliness and anxiety. Therefore, when you feel down or stressed out, talk to your family and friends.

Understanding signal words

Signal words are like traffic lights or road signs. They give hints about what is going to happen, warn you of changes in direction so that you can follow the author's sequence of ideas more readily, and therefore improve your reading comprehension. Signal words can be used to show relations between sentence parts, between sentences, or even between paragraphs. There are many different types of signal words. The following are some commonly used ones. The examples used here are all taken from Text A.

1 Words that signal additional information: also, and, furthermore, additionally, moreover, besides, too, in addition (to), not only ... but also ...

- It's also true that many students use social media responsibly without compromising their health or school performance. (Para. 4)

2 Words that signal an example or explanation: for example, for instance, such as, like, including; in other words, that is to say

- If kids develop compulsive texting and social media habits, like Zoey, they can suffer badly. (Para. 9)

3 Words that signal a change of thoughts: although, but, however, yet, instead, nevertheless, whereas, on the other hand, on the contrary

- Certainly, numerous other factors may be driving this trend, but preliminary research links depression with social media usage. (Para. 6)

4 Words that signal comparison or contrast: same, the same as, as, likewise, similarly, similar to, compare, comparable to; while, whereas, different from, more / less (than), contrast, by / in contrast, by / in comparison

- More people have reported symptoms of being depressed in recent years than in the 1980s. (Para. 5)

5 Words that signal time order or sequence: before, earlier, previously, after, when, while, soon, originally; next, then, first, to begin with, second, third, finally, lastly

- It all started after she came home in seventh grade with a notebook the school had given her ... (Para. 2)

6 Words that signal cause, condition, or result: because (of), as, owing to, thanks to; given (that), if; then, therefore, consequently, in turn, as a result

- This was the second time that week that Zoey had flown into a violent rage because her parents had taken away her access to social media. (Para. 1)
- Thanks to social media, we are the most connected society ever in history. Worldwide, approximately 3.5 million emails are sent per second. (Para. 5)

7 Words that signal emphasis or intensification: above all, most of all, the most, in particular, it's high / about time (that), it's important to note (that), most importantly, no doubt, certainly, obviously, surely, clearly, in fact, indeed, actually, frankly, do (to emphasize the main verb in a sentence)

- No doubt, social connection is an essential part of being human and also a significant factor contributing to happiness and health. (Para. 5)
- Certainly, numerous other factors may be driving this trend, but preliminary research links depression with social media usage. (Para. 6)

Pay attention to different signal words in reading to help with reading comprehension, and learn to use them in your own writing to get your points across in an effective way.

1 Read Para. 2 and Para. 3 of Text B and underline the signal words.

1 I like this instant communication with Tommy because I can check what he's doing and evaluate how he's feeling. People who do not care about social media may claim, "I don't care what anybody ate for breakfast this morning. That's boring!" Their indifference contrasts with my own interest in my son. I would love to listen to his detailed description of a piece of bacon when he's in his other house. I absolutely do care about this. In fact, I hang on his every word. Is face-to-face conversation better? Frankly, yes, but I cannot readily share Tommy's morning otherwise. It is meaningless to ask him about an event two days later, long after it happened. Before I go to bed, I'm reluctant to switch off my phone. Suppose he needs to reach me? (Para. 2)

2 I continued to think about this topic while I was in the coffee shop. In fact, I am amazed by the power of social media to harness technology to satisfy human needs and motives. As I scanned that day's newspaper, I noticed an appealing headline: "Social Media Helps Find the Missing Kid". The news story was about a missing child who had been found after people had spread the information on the local social media platform. Clearly, finding lost children through online social forums is triumphant news. I read about the family's tears and the heartfelt concern of the people in that town and in the whole country. It made me marvel at the human side of the Internet. (Para. 3)

Text B

1 On my way to a coffee shop where I like to sit and read the daily newspaper, I caught a glimpse of the first message of the day from my 10-year-old son Tommy. He said good morning and told me that he was going to a friend's birthday party after school. I do not get to see Tommy all the time, given that he is at his dad's home on weekdays. Fortunately, Tommy and I have installed a social media app on our cell phones. This ensures we stay connected.

2 I like this instant communication with Tommy because I can check what he's doing and evaluate how he's feeling. People who do not care about social media may claim, "I don't care what anybody ate for breakfast this morning. That's boring!" Their indifference contrasts with my own interest in my son. I would love to listen to his detailed description of a piece of bacon when he's in his other house. I absolutely do care about this. In fact, I hang on his every word. Is face-to-face conversation better? Frankly, yes, but I cannot readily share Tommy's morning otherwise. It is meaningless to ask him about an event two days later, long after it happened. Before I go to bed, I'm reluctant to switch off my phone. Suppose he needs to reach me?

3 I continued to think about this topic while I was in the coffee shop. In fact, I am amazed by the power of social media to harness technology to satisfy human needs and motives. As I scanned that day's newspaper, I noticed an appealing headline: "Social Media Helps Find the Missing Kid". The news story was about a missing child who had been found after people had spread the information on the local social media platform. Clearly, finding lost children through online social forums is triumphant news. I read about the family's tears and the heartfelt concern of the people in that town and in the whole country. It made me marvel at the human side of the Internet.

4 I recently asked my friends: "Does social media bring people closer to you or push them farther away?" My question sparked many interesting responses. My friend Jenny texted me: "I have mixed feelings about cell phones! My two kids are with me right now, and both of them – and I – are distracted by our phones. I am listening to a podcast while they are uploading photos on their social media. The irony is that we are sitting side by side but we are worlds apart. And yet, at school they will text me, send me photos, and answer my questions at all times." Another friend Ryan summed up the answer to my question this way: "With social media, we can feel closer to people we're far away from, and farther away from the people we should be close to. I am so confused!"

5 Ryan is right. It is confusing to weigh the overall value of social media. We are aware of this modern-day paradox – social media draws us nearer and simultaneously distances us. But I think we often miss the old ways and forget to admire what we have become. Maybe it is human nature to want to reject change when it occurs quickly and seems everywhere all at once. Social media captures our eyes, our hearts, and our money so quickly that some of us may wonder what rituals of relationship and social interaction will be lost in this process.

6 Sitting in the coffee shop, I noticed four people in my immediate vicinity looking at screens, and four people reading something on paper. I was doing both. I saw social media apps open on two laptops, but I was sure that at some point, they had been open on all of the screens. The dynamics in this coffee shop were revealing. People were not giving up long-form reading or social interaction. They were just filling all the space in between.

7 From the outside view, digital interactions appear to be cold and inhuman. Nevertheless, the Internet does not steal our humanity; it reflects what's inside us. Social media is not cold; it is just complex and hard to define. As we can see, the Internet has quickly become the center of cultural media, intertwined with our families, our lives, and our culture. But the Internet does not control us. It is a tool, as advanced today as a sharpened stick was a couple million years ago. Looking at social media through this lens, perhaps we can reframe discussions about technology from how it is changing us to how we can make better use of this powerful tool.

Stories of China

Chinese people love their social media APPS

According to a statistical report on Internet development, the number of Internet users in China surpassed 1 billion and the Internet penetration rate (普及率) reached 74.4 percent in the country as of June 2022. The increasing Internet access has contributed to the formation of the largest digital society in the world, the report said.

It is said that Chinese people regard smartphone social media apps as a daily requirement, and most of them spend about two hours a day using the apps.

Jia Zhu, 31, who works for a fashion company in Beijing, told China Daily that she uses her smartphone more than 10 hours a day. "Honestly, I have to say sometimes I can only put my phone down when I'm sleeping," she said. She uses social media apps mainly to contact family, colleagues, and clients (客户). "I once thought I could leave social media apps at some point, but I found it so hard," she said. "Most of the information I get is from the apps. If I give them up, I may miss what's going on."

Kong Yiying, a 30-year-old lady from a fishing company in Guangzhou, Guangdong Province, said she could control her time online, especially on social media apps. "I surf the Internet on the computer for a limited time, and spend less than an hour on my smartphone. I use my smartphone to order food and buy some other daily necessities (必需品), which doesn't take much time online," she said. She added that self-discipline helped her avoid addiction to the social media apps.

Social media is popular not only among Chinese city dwellers but also among farmers. They use social media apps to sell their produce directly to urban consumers as millions of viewers tune in to watch them. In a live streaming video on a social media platform, a farmer sits in her greenhouse and displays the vegetables and fruit she grows on her farm: tomatoes, cucumbers, peaches, etc. Such videos are particularly popular. Viewers can buy the produce just by clicking a button and very quickly, boxes of fruit and vegetables are delivered to their doorstep.

The report noted that with better access to the Internet, social media apps have become an important part of people's lives and have been creating more possibilities and value for users.

Unit 5

Friendship across border and gender

— Mencius
(Chinese philosopher)

友也者，友其德也。

——孟子
（中国哲学家）

Preview

Confucius said, "Is it not delightful to have friends coming from afar?" Around the world, in every culture, people value and love their friends. People become friends for different reasons – a shared childhood, similar hobbies, same beliefs, or a common cause. True friendship can last a lifetime, and it brings us great joy and happiness. For those who share the same beliefs and fight for the same noble cause, friendship means commitment and devotion to their common values and goals.

Friendship binds us together regardless of age, gender, race, or nationality. How important are friends to you? How do you keep in touch with your friends? What do you value most in friendship? What can you do to strengthen friendship? Are you willing to give up your own comfort to help your friends?

Text A

1 The presentation ceremony for the national medals and honorary titles of the People's Republic of China was held at the Great Hall of the People in 2019. Among all the laureates, a white-haired elderly lady was in the spotlight. She was awarded the Friendship Medal, China's highest order of honor for foreigners. When Isabel Crook walked slowly onto the stage, there was a burst of enthusiastic applause to salute this 104-year-old laureate. At that moment, she couldn't help thinking of her husband David Crook. If he were still alive, he would have definitely appeared on the podium with her.

2 The Crooks belonged to the generation who grew up during the raging flames of the two world wars. The call of the times prompted them to hold a communist belief, so later they both joined the British Communist Party. In November 1947, with a letter of introduction from the British Communist Party, they crossed the oceans, broke through the blockade lines, and finally arrived in Shilidian in the old revolutionary base area of the Taihang Mountains in China.

3 Arranged by relevant leaders of the Communist Party of China, the Crooks became members of a work team in Shilidian, which reexamined the whole process of the land reform, together with the peasants and the Party organization there. Meanwhile, they noted down what they had observed. The observations were later published in the book Revolution in a Chinese Village: Ten Mile Inn. In 1948, when they were preparing to leave China, some leaders of the Party invited them to stay to help train foreign language personnel for New China.

4 Although totally unprepared, the Crooks put aside their original plan. Out of their heartfelt dedication to the cause of the Chinese revolution, they went to the Central Foreign Affairs School, the predecessor of Beijing Foreign Studies University, to report for duty – a turning point in the course of their life. For more than half a century, they worked tirelessly and conscientiously for China's foreign language education. When people asked them, "Why did you choose to work in China?", they responded, "The main reason, of course, is our political commitment."

5 It is this sense of commitment derived from their belief that enabled them to cultivate brotherly friendships with the Chinese people. While working in Shilidian, they always shared their joys and sorrows with the villagers. The Crooks learned how to carry manure to the fields on a shoulder pole and how to use a Chinese hoe. They were often seen squatting by the fields with rice bowls in their hands, chatting while eating with the villagers. As a result, the villagers ceased to regard the Crooks as "foreigners" and treated them as their members of the family.

6 The Crooks were always eager to integrate with the masses no matter when and where. Tall and dressed in the blue cotton-padded uniform, they looked like everyone else around them, except for their faces. They gnawed wowotou and pickles and ate cabbage soup together with others during the difficult times. They also took the initiative to request cutting their salary. They never complained about the harsh conditions because of their faith in communism.

7 The common belief in communism also led to comradely friendships. People always called the Crooks comrades. When they revisited Shilidian, the local people affectionately called them "Comrade David" and "Comrade Isabel". Even our beloved Premier Zhou Enlai cordially called them comrades and regarded them as good friends of the Chinese people.

8 The Crooks, who blazed a trail in the field of English teaching in New China, contributed to the training of generation after generation of foreign language talent in the fields of foreign affairs, history, trade and finance, journalism, education, etc. They were all inspired by the Crooks' spirit of selfless devotion. In the early 1960s, when the Soviet Union withdrew all their experts from China, the Crooks chose to stay. They said, "China is faced with economic difficulties. At a crucial moment like this, we can't just leave." So, without hesitation, they turned down the job offer from the University of Leeds.

9 The life of the Crooks in China was both ordinary and extraordinary. It was ordinary because they were always in the grass roots – a member of the Shilidian work team and a faculty member at school. It was extraordinary because they left their homeland for the Chinese revolutionary cause, to which they made an absolute commitment. The friendship between the Crooks and the Chinese people is eternal! The Chinese people will never forget what David Crook said in the 1980s: "I am confident that by the end of this century … China, which Isabel and I love, which has become our second homeland, will be creating a strong socialist society."

Culture notes

David Crook and Isabel Crook: David Crook, a British communist and educator, and Isabel Crook, an educator from Canada, were husband and wife. The couple observed and participated in the land reform movement of China during the 1940s and later became pioneers of English teaching in New China. They spent many years in China, witnessing and contributing to the development of China's foreign language education. David Crook passed away in 2000. In 2019, Isabel Crook was awarded the Friendship Medal.

Structure analysis and writing

Structure analysis

A paragraph of cause and effect

One important way of organizing a paragraph is using the pattern of cause and effect. A cause is what makes something happen; an effect is what happens as a result. A cause-and-effect paragraph analyzes the cause(s) or effect(s) of a certain situation or event. Using the cause-and-effect pattern usually means first describing the cause(s) and then explaining the effect(s), or first stating the effect(s) and then examining the cause(s). In other words, a cause-and-effect paragraph may explain one or more causes or effects.

The cause-and-effect pattern can be used to organize not only a single paragraph but also a set of paragraphs. In Text A, Paras. 5-7 are a case in point. As shown in the following chart, each of the three paragraphs describes an effect resulting from the communist belief of the Crooks: brotherly friendships, integration with the masses, and comradely friendships. Expressions such as as a result and led to help signal the cause-effect relationship.

The communist belief of the Crooks (Cause) enabled them to build eternal friendship with the Chinese people (Effect).

|---|---|---|
| Brotherly friendships: They cultivated brotherly friendships with the Chinese people, sharing their joys and sorrows with the villagers … eating and chatting with the villagers. (Para. 5) | Integration with the masses: They tried their best to become part of the masses, e.g. they were dressed in the blue cotton-padded uniform … and never complained about the harsh conditions. (Para. 6) | Comradely friendships: Their communist belief led to comradely friendships with the Chinese people. (Para. 7) |

7 Read Para. 4 of Text A and analyze the pattern of cause and effect. Identify and label the cause(s) and effect(s).

Although totally unprepared, the Crooks put aside their original plan. Out of their heartfelt dedication to the cause of the Chinese revolution, they went to the Central Foreign Affairs School, the predecessor of Beijing Foreign Studies University, to report for duty – a turning point in the course of their life. For more than half a century, they worked tirelessly and conscientiously for China's foreign language education. When people asked them, "Why did you choose to work in China?", they responded, "The main reason, of course, is our political commitment."

Structured writing

Read the sample paragraph and see how it uses the pattern of cause and effect.

Topic

Impacts of global warming on polar bears

Cause

Global warming

Effects

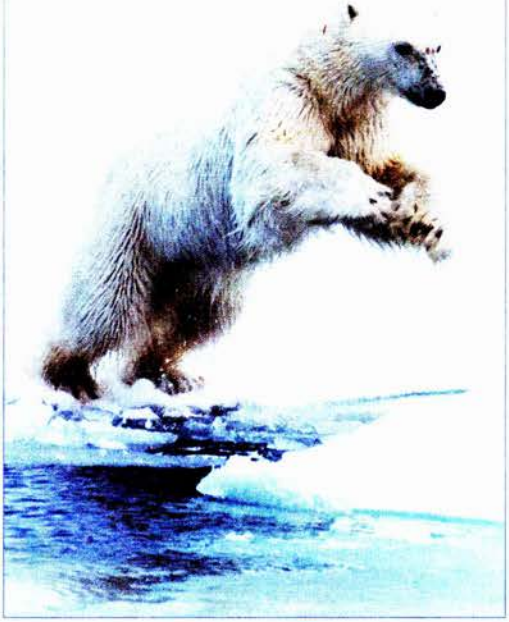
- Ice that polar bears depend on melting away
- Lack of food: fewer hunting opportunities
- Reduced population: adult females with lower body weight; low cub ( 幼兽 ) survival rate



Global warming has negative effects on the life of polar bears. It is said that the Arctic ( 北极 ) is warming about four times as fast as the global average due to climate change, causing the ice that polar bears depend on to melt away. With the ice melting earlier in spring and forming later in winter, the bears have fewer opportunities to hunt for food and have to go without food for longer. Scientists have found this can result in lower body weight in adult females. Consequently, fewer cubs survive and the population is getting smaller. While polar bears may have shown some ability to adapt to changes in their surroundings, scientists predict polar bears will find it harder to get food as sea ice keeps disappearing and they may face the risk of extinction ( 灭绝 ) in the future.

Reading skills

Finding the main idea of a paragraph

One of the important reading skills is finding the main idea of a paragraph. The main idea of a paragraph is the thought that is present throughout the paragraph, and it is what the author tries to get across to the reader. In a well-written paragraph, most of the sentences support, describe, or explain the main idea. Therefore, in order to understand a paragraph better, you need to know what its main idea is.

Very often the main idea of a paragraph is directly stated in the topic sentence, which is often found at the beginning of a paragraph; sometimes it is in the middle or at the end of the paragraph. However, in some paragraphs, the main idea is implied, that is, not directly stated. You may need to learn some strategies to determine the main idea of a paragraph. You can ask yourself the following questions after you read a paragraph.

- What is the subject of the paragraph?
- What is the purpose of discussing the subject?
- What idea is the author trying to convey about the subject?

Take a look at Para. 8 of Text A.

The Crooks, who blazed a trail in the field of English teaching in New China, contributed to the training of generation after generation of foreign language talent in the fields of foreign affairs, history, trade and finance, journalism, education, etc. They were all inspired by the Crooks' spirit of selfless devotion. In the early 1960s, when the Soviet Union withdrew all their experts from China, the Crooks chose to stay. They said, "China is faced with economic difficulties. At a crucial moment like this, we can't just leave." So, without hesitation, they turned down the job offer from the University of Leeds.

We can find the main idea of Para. 8 by asking the three questions mentioned above. After reading the paragraph, we come to know that the subject of the paragraph is "the Crooks' contribution and devotion to New China". The author's purpose is to describe what the Crooks did for New China and how devoted they were. Based on this understanding, we can figure out that the main idea the author wants to get across is: The Crooks were devoted to English teaching and helped cultivate generations of foreign language talent for New China.

Finding the main idea can be challenging, especially when it is not as directly stated as the given example. However, if you follow the strategies mentioned above, you will be well on your way to improving your reading comprehension.

1 Read Para. 2 and Para. 5 of Text B and find out their main ideas by answering the following questions.

1 What is the subject of the paragraph?
2 What is the purpose of discussing the subject?
3 What idea is the author trying to convey about the subject?

Text B

1 When I think of my good friends, I see them in cinematic terms. The camerawork is entirely different for men and women. The "movie" memories I have of female friends are open and intimate. We are talking, interested in each other in a magnetic sort of way. They look straight into my eyes, sensitive to my feelings, listening to me with deliberate attention. In comparison, memories of male friends are in an entirely different film altogether. An action or adventure movie! Not much in the way of dialogue. The ritual of motion, or the sequence of action, makes up for the deficiency of dialogue and honest narrative.

2 My mind retreats back to my earliest childhood friend, Donald. I was still living in Europe at the time, and near my house was an abandoned old truck. No wheels. No windshield. No doors. But the steering wheel was intact. Donald and I continuously "flew" to America in that truck, our "airplane". Even now, I remember our daily ritual as we flew along, across Europe, across the Atlantic, on a mission of mercy. We were innocent and inseparable, enjoying the deep security that comes between best friends. Naturally, not one word of our evident feelings for one another was ever uttered; it was all done in actions.

3 Each day, as we were flying over the Atlantic, there inevitably came that wonderful moment: "Engine failure!" I'd shout into the microphone, "We'll have to jump out." "A-a-a-a-a-!" Donald made sounds like a failing engine. Glancing at me, he'd say, "I can't swim!" "Fear not! I'll drag you to shore," I'd bravely reply. And, with that, we'd both spill out of the truck onto the dusty street. I swam through the dust. Donald drowned in the dust, coughing. "Sharks!" he cried. But I always saved him. The next day, changing roles, the elaborate drama would repeat. "I can't swim!" I'd say and Donald would save me. We saved each other from certain death hundreds of times, until finally a day came when my family really did leave for America. Donald and I stood rigid at the train station ready to say farewell. We didn't know what to say; we couldn't save each other this time. So, we just cried silently as the train pulled away.

4 These days, Jessica is one of my best friends. A recent occurrence made me reexamine and interpret my behavior in a new light. We were swimming at a beach in the Atlantic. The very Atlantic I had "flown" over in that old truck with Donald. We were far from shore when we abruptly turned back. We both thought we had detected a shark! Water is not only a good conductor of electricity but of panic as well. We began splashing like crazy people toward the shore. In my panic, I suddenly realized how much I loved my friend Jessica, and what an irreplaceable friend she was. Although I was the faster swimmer, I fell back to protect her. In the end, the "shark" proved to be imaginary. But not my deep emotional feelings for my friend. We felt great back on the beach, a little scared and laughing with the excitement of being alive. We looked into each other's eyes and Jessica spontaneously said, "I love you!" "Love you, too!" I replied.

5 As I spoke, I realized just how gender-based my communication style was. With women, I could be open, emotionally honest, and transparent. With male friends, it seemed impossible to express caring feelings no matter how deep the friendship was. I could easily utter "I love you" to my mother, my sisters, and my close female friends; yet not once in my life had I been able to look a male friend in the eye and say the same thing. Quite impossible! Was this just me or was every male in the world similarly cursed? Was I emotionally backward or just a "guy"? I was determined to find out!

6 Much to my relief, research shows that I am, indeed, a "normal guy". It seems that men and women have very different emotional and rational processes. Part of it is "nature" and part is "nurture". We are born with different genetic tendencies which society encourages as either "masculine" or "feminine". These differences in behavior and communication style were made famous by John Gray in his book Men Are from Mars, Women Are from Venus. This book and other articles helped me realize it's OK to be the way I am. Men do tend to be more restrained with emotional expressions. I learned that I did love all my friends – only the means of expression differs from one gender to the other. What a relief!

People value friendship because it is important. A lot of times, we make friends and begin a friendship when we feel lonely or when we want to share our emotional feelings. So good friends often share their joys and sorrows with each other. And it is always a good way to cultivate a friendship through shared activities, similar interests, or common beliefs. However, it takes far more to build an eternal friendship. Deliberate attention and heartfelt dedication are the key to a deep and lasting friendship. Many people argue that it's impossible for us to draw distinct boundaries ( 界限 ) between friendship and love. For example, some people start with friendship but end up getting married. If it is a friendship that turns into a romance, it is not purely a friendship.

Even if these people don't end up getting married, their friendship may not last long. ## Stories of China

Picture this: Friends forever

For 50-year-old Jin Jinli and seven of her closest friends, group photos are more than just an aid for their memories. For them, taking group photos has become a decades-long tradition. And it has become a way of setting a world record.

In the following decades since 1977, Jin and her seven friends met every year to have a group photo taken at the same studio. No matter how far they had to travel or how busy their lives were, they always met for their annual photo.

The eight women are all from the town of Kunyang, Pingyang County, Wenzhou City, Zhejiang Province, and they were classmates in the first grade of primary school. "We were very close friends at school. We went to classes together, went home together, did homework together, and went to the cinema together. We were like sisters growing up together," Jin says.

In 1977, some of the girls had to leave for other cities. "The happy days we spent together were so precious," Cai Guili, one of the eight women, says. "No one wanted to be apart. When we realized separation was an inevitable part of growing up, we decided to have a group photo so that we could remember one another."

On July 17, 1977, the teenage girls were dressed in their most beautiful clothes, wore the same braided ( 编辫子的 ) hairstyle, and had a photo taken at Beimen Photo Studio in Pingyang. The girls smile sweetly in the faded black-and-white photo. Someone in the group then suggested that they take a photo every year. That tradition has endured over the past several decades.

Every year, the eight friends take turns to organize the group photo event. "In the beginning, we were single and didn't live far from one another, so it was easy to get together," Jin says. "However, as we grew older, got married, had children, and even moved, it became difficult to arrange. But no one has ever missed the annual gathering."

Lin Jinglu, the owner of Beimen Photo Studio, has been a major witness (见证者) of the decades-long friendship. "I saw them change from teenagers to adults, from wives to mothers, and even grandmothers," he says.

Over the years, the black-and-white photos have given way to images in color, and the small-sized shots have become bigger prints. In 2011, the eight friends were awarded a certificate for "the world's longest continuous time span for a group photo taken each year".

Conducting a debate on having a large circle of friends vs. a small circle of friends

Friendship is important to everyone, but different people have different opinions on the size of their circle of friends. Some like to keep it small with only a few close friends while others prefer to keep expanding it to include more friends. Which do you think is better, having a large circle of friends or a small circle of friends? In this unit project, you are going to conduct a debate on this topic.

Step 1 Divide the class into two big groups. Group A supports the idea that it is better to have a large circle of friends while Group B believes it is better to have a small circle of friends. Within each group, form small teams of three or four, and then discuss your reasons with your team members.

Step 2 After class, work with your team members to do research and collect supporting materials for your viewpoint. Each team should come up with at least four reasons to support your viewpoint.

Step 3 In the next class, share the reasons with your group members and then select four to six debaters from each group to have a class debate on the topic.

6 Winning is not everything

Victory isn't defined by wins or losses. It is defined by effort. If you can truthfully say, "I did the best I could; I gave everything I had", then you're a winner.

Sports can teach valuable life lessons and create wonderful memories. Learning to keep going even when you are tired, and being humble in victory and generous in defeat are just a few of the valuable lessons sports can teach. As a famous sportswriter said, "It's not whether you win or lose. It's how you play the game." Equally important, sports teach people the value of teamwork and cooperation. A good example is the Chinese women's national volleyball team, who have demonstrated the power of united and cooperative efforts.

However, it is also important to be cautious. Overemphasis on competitiveness can ruin the joy of sports and have a negative impact on young people. Now, think about the questions: What lessons have you learned from playing sports? How do Chinese athletes with great sportsmanship inspire you? What are the traits of a great athlete and a strong team? How will you ensure a good balance between intense competition and friendly play in team sports?

Text A

1 Considered one of the toughest marathon events in the world, the 875-kilometer annual Australian race, a route from Sydney to Melbourne, was a harsh test of endurance for the world's top athletes, regardless of their age. The young, super-fit runners trained for months before the competition and were under contract to prominent sponsors, who financed them and furnished them with a substantial support mechanism of money and equipment. The contest took up to seven days to complete and was a challenging test of fitness and strength even for world-class athletes who competed for distinction and a cash prize.

2 On the day of the race in 1983, Cliff Young, a toothless 61-year-old farmer and amateur runner, wearing rubber boots, and much older than the other runners, was in attendance. No one paid any attention to this odd-looking man who might as well have been invisible. The assembled crowd assumed Cliff was there to observe the race. When he asserted his intention to compete, the world-class athletes around him reacted with apparent disbelief and then with disrespect. Obviously, this was some sort of publicity trick.

3 But the press was curious, so as he took his number and moved into the crush of runners in their special, expensive racing gear, the camera focused on Cliff and the assembled reporters shouted question after question at him. They asked: "Who are you?" "What are you doing?"

4 "I'm Cliff Young. I'm from a large farm where we raise sheep outside of Melbourne."

5 They went on, "What makes you think you can run this race? It takes a week to run this race on no more than six hours of sleep a night!"

6 Cliff replied, "I've run sheep for two or three days at a time. This race should only be a couple more days than that. I believe I can do it."

7 Soon, the marathon started and the young athletes left Cliff far behind. The crowds smiled, and some laughed out loud because he didn't even run properly. He had the strangest running style; he appeared to shuffle. As the race progressed along, of course, the attention of the sports commentators and viewers alike was on the athletes at the front of the pack. Imagine everyone's surprise the next morning when the news showed Cliff was still in the race! Not only that, but he had run through the entire night without sleeping. And it seemed that he intended to keep running until he reached the finish line or fell ill or was injured, as many viewers now began to fear. They were uneasy and very concerned for his welfare. Many people said and even more people thought: "Surely, someone should stop this insane old man before he really harms himself!"

8 But Cliff had no intention of stopping. Although he was still far behind the world-class athletes, he kept at it. When he got to a major town, he was asked about his plan for the rest of the race.

He said he would just keep running, and he did. With every passing hour and every shuffling step, he got just a little bit closer to the leading runners. Later, he told people that throughout the race he kept focused by imagining he was gathering his sheep and trying to outrun a storm.

9 By the fifth night, he had overtaken them all. By the sixth day, he had led the whole pack of runners by a wide margin. He led all the way to the finish line, finishing the 875-kilometer race in 5 days, 15 hours, and 4 minutes – setting a new record for runs between the two cities! In that instant, Cliff Young became a beloved national hero.

10 When Cliff was awarded the first prize of $10,000, he said he didn't know there was a prize and insisted that he had not entered for the money. He said, "There're five other runners still out there doing it tougher than me", and he gave them $2,000 each. He did not keep a single cent for himself. That act increased his fame and endeared him to all of Australia.

11 Cliff came to prominence again in 1997, at the age of 75, when he attempted to become the oldest man to run around Australia and raise money for homeless children.

12 For the rest of his life, Cliff kept running. Over the years, despite increasing age and physical challenges, he participated in many races and won a few. It was said that Cliff Young had never kept a single prize. People gave him watches because he never had one. He would thank them because he did not want to hurt their feelings, but then would give them away. He said, "I don't need a watch. I know when it's daylight, when it's dark, and when I'm hungry."

13 His love for running never dimmed, but in the year 2000, he suffered a mild stroke that ended his heroic running days. Cliff Young, the running legend, passed away on November 2, 2003. He was 81.

14 To this day, Cliff Young remains a magnificent reminder and brilliant example of how ordinary individuals can achieve remarkable results. As the famous saying goes, "Where there's a will, there's a way!" With determination and preparation, we can achieve distinction and be a brilliant example to others.

A paragraph of time order

One logical way to develop a paragraph is to arrange details in time order. In other words, details are presented in the time sequence in which they happen. If details are arranged in time order, the reader will find it easier to remember each step or event. Time order is very useful in explaining a process, describing a historical event, or telling a story. To clearly show the time sequence, you can use signal words such as when, while, before, after, until, during, soon after, as soon as, first of all, at the beginning, and in the end.

Text A is about the life of Cliff Young, particularly his experience of attending a marathon race in 1983, and the whole text is arranged in time order. Besides, some individual paragraphs are organized in time order as well. Look at Para. 7 and see how it is organized in time order and what signal words are used to indicate time order. The underlined parts are signal words.

Soon, the marathon started and the young athletes left Cliff far behind. The crowds smiled, and some laughed out loud because he didn't even run properly. He had the strangest running style; he appeared to shuffle. As the race progressed along, of course, the attention of the sports commentators and viewers alike was on the athletes at the front of the pack. Imagine everyone's surprise the next morning when the news showed Cliff was still in the race! Not only that, but he had run through the entire night without sleeping. And it seemed that he intended to keep running until he reached the finish line or fell ill or was injured, as many viewers now began to fear. They were uneasy and very concerned for his welfare. Many people said and even more people thought: "Surely, someone should stop this insane old man before he really harms himself!"

7 Read Para. 9 of Text A and underline the signal words that indicate time order.

By the fifth night, he had overtaken them all. By the sixth day, he had led the whole pack of runners by a wide margin. He led all the way to the finish line, finishing the 875-kilometer race in 5 days, 15 hours, and 4 minutes – setting a new record for runs between the two cities! In that instant, Cliff Young became a beloved national hero.

There are many ethnic ( 种族的 ) groups living in the Hawaiian Islands today. In the 1850s, the first group of immigrants ( 移民 ), the majority of whom were Chinese, arrived at the islands, and they were followed by the Japanese in the 1880s. Then in the early 1900s, the Koreans and Filipinos reached the islands, forming the last major group of Asian immigrant workers. Many of those immigrants worked hard and raised their families on the islands. Today, many people from Mexico and some Central American countries follow their footsteps and work on the Hawaiian Islands.

Reading skills

Skimming

Skimming is a method of fast reading to find the main idea or major facts of a text. When reading news reports or long articles, people naturally use the skill of skimming. The most important thing about skimming is to look for general information. Unlike scanning, which involves searching for details, skimming requires the reader to focus on the general or main idea. Good readers read selectively, skipping over some sentences, paragraphs, or even whole pages. Once they have a general idea about a text through skimming, they may decide to read a certain part more carefully. The following steps for skimming will help you get started.

1 Read the title of the text.
2 Read the first paragraph.
3 Read the subheadings if there are any.
4 Read the first sentence of every paragraph.
5 Glance over the body of the text, looking for:
   - Clue words about who, what, when, where, and why.
   - Transition words such as furthermore, also, however, and on the contrary.
6 Read the final paragraph.

For example, after a glance at the title of Text A "Cliff Young, an extraordinary runner" and a quick reading of the first paragraph, you learn that this text is about Cliff Young (who), an extraordinary runner in an Australian marathon race (what and where), which was one of the toughest marathon events in the world.

If you want more information, you can keep skimming by reading the first sentence of each paragraph. For example, the first sentence of Para. 2 tells you when the race was held (in 1983) and who Cliff Young was (a toothless 61-year-old farmer and amateur runner). The first sentence of Para. 7 tells you how Cliff was doing when the marathon started: "Soon, the marathon started and the young athletes left Cliff far behind." The first sentence of Para. 8 is about what Cliff intended to do in the race, and the first sentence of Para. 9 is about when he overtook other athletes.

If you are not interested in all the details, skimming will provide you with just enough information to have an overview of a text.

I Answer the following questions about Text B by using the reading skill of skimming.

1 What is the text mainly about?
2 What benefits can playing sports bring to young people?
3 Can participation in competitive team sports do harm to young people?

Text B

SHAPING young lives with sports

1 The leaders of tomorrow are shaped and molded in the here and now. The goal should be, in the words of the Roman poet Juvenal, "A healthy mind in a healthy body". For parents, teachers, and coaches, there is no greater responsibility than sustaining the mental and physical health of our young people.

2 Growing children need inspiration and physical stimulation. Team sports are a great way to provide these attributes! More than just entertainment, through sports young people learn critical skills that will serve them well in their adult lives. The ability to work toward a common goal underlines the value of teamwork. Being both humble in victory and generous in defeat emphasizes the mutual obligation of graceful manners in all human interactions. The lessons our youth learn will stay with them all their lives, and there is no better place to assist this learning than on the playing field.

3 Of course, the most critical lessons youngsters receive are those that they are taught by their parents and teachers. Nevertheless, many lessons remain abstract concepts until they are made real by life experiences. You can talk about how bitter lemons are or how sweet honey is. However, you cannot understand the true meaning of "bitter" and "sweet" until you actually taste lemons and honey. Knowledge comes from the application of ideas in the experience of real life. Strategy, teamwork, and cooperation are crucial concepts that can be best learned and understood through sports. Team sports give children a natural place to work hard and learn valuable life lessons.

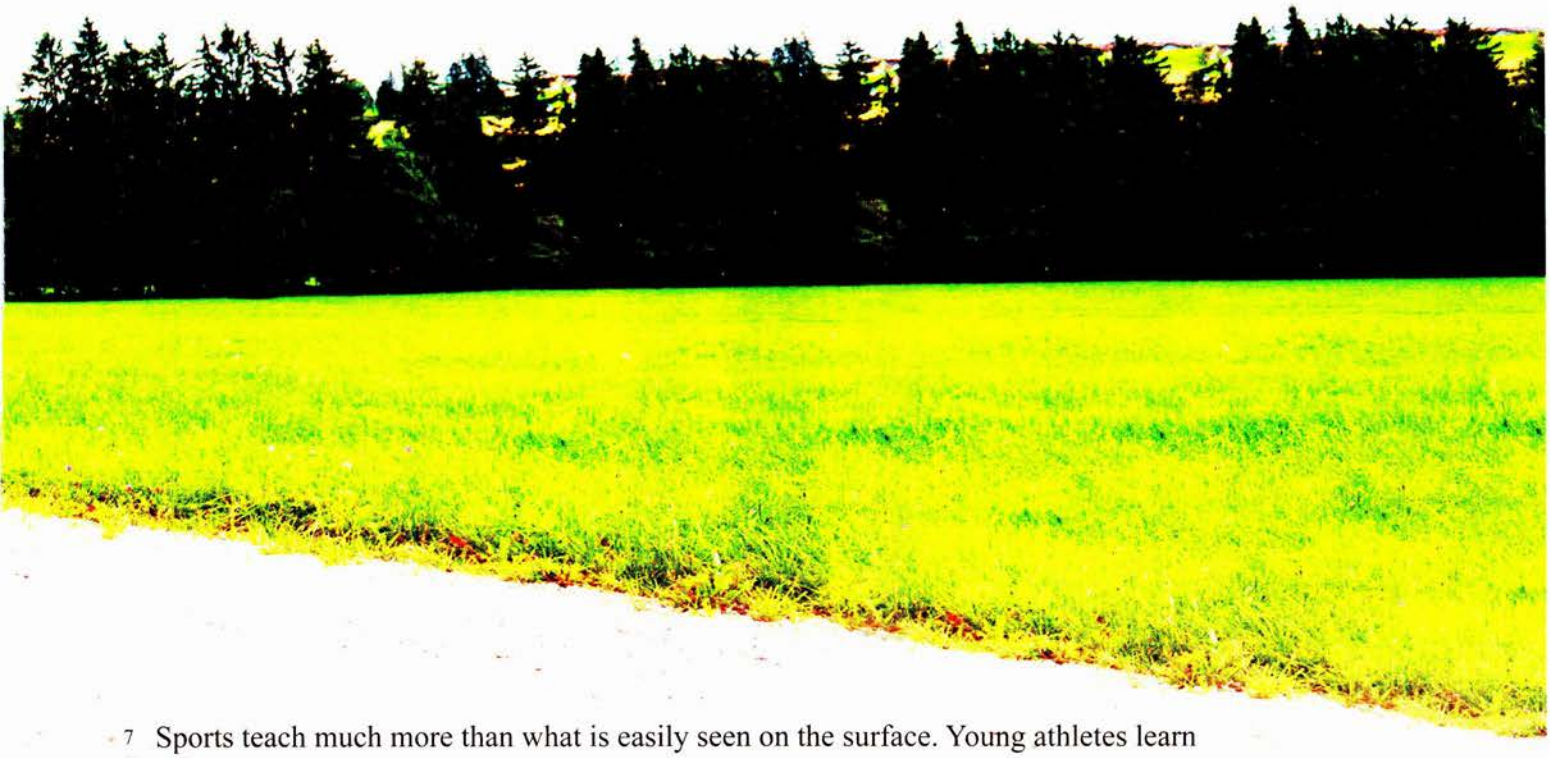
4 Naturally, those who are inherently talented will be likely to spend more time on the field and achieve fame. They have the opportunity to develop leadership skills and earn the respect of their team members. However, the benefits of participating in team sports are not dependent on natural ability. Young people don't need to be stars to benefit from team membership. It doesn't matter whether they are gifted at their chosen sport. As a famous sportswriter said, "It's not whether you win or lose. It's how you play the game."

5 Sports can inspire and encourage the less naturally talented athletes to do their best. What is missing in natural talent can be overcome through hard work, practice, and learning from the example of others. Those lacking in talent should never be envious, and they may learn more about the real world than the gifted players because they learn early on that there are no free rides and that they will have to make continuous effort if they want to achieve something. Through sports, they will learn the value of individual hard work and the even greater value of cooperation and teamwork. They will also learn the fundamental importance of planning and preparation for the positive outcome of their life's ambitions. These are all lessons that will be valuable to them both in their careers and in their personal lives.

6 Of course, participation in competitive team sports is not without hazards. Some psychologists have expressed considerable concern about the intensity of competition in youth sports. They argue that children often suffer psychological harm when the emphasis is exclusively on winning. An American football coach, famous for his competitive spirit, said, "Winning isn't everything; it is the only thing." Such an outlook can be harsh on children when they feel pressured to win. Child psychologists often blame parents and coaches for creating this pressure by being too demanding. Because of such excessive emphasis on winning, children miss the learning opportunities sports can offer. In such circumstances, the sports experience uncovers draining and harmful consequences, canceling out the many desirable effects of sports.



7 Sports teach much more than what is easily seen on the surface. Young athletes learn something every time they step onto the field. Playing sports does much more than just keep young bodies in shape and growing at healthy rates. It gives youth a sense of self-worth and accomplishment and teaches them to deal capably with failure and success. It helps them learn the ways of the world, the benefits of hard work and determination, and how to coexist with others to achieve a common goal. It allows youth to find a role they can fill, then to change or adapt to that role, and, over time, to grow and redefine who they are and who they will become. These are all traits that can be extremely useful in the real world, and developing such traits at an early age paves the way for success later in life.

Stories of China

Lessons China can teach us about fitness

In America, health seekers go for solo (单独的) gym time, mindlessly lifting on weight machines or walking miles on running machines. We treat daily fitness like high-intensity professional training, and are sure to track it with a wearable digital gadget. But we can lose the fun, companionship, and lifelong habits that many Chinese have with square dancing and playing jianzi in the park.

Here's what we can learn from the Chinese about fitness.

You don't have to kill yourself to make it count

When you push yourself too hard, you may be doing more harm than good. Many Chinese build strength in a different way: with Taijiquan. Taijiquan, a martial art (武术) valued for its defensive practices and health benefits, creates strength, flexibility, and balance through flowing movements. Think it's easy? Try dropping into a squat for several minutes while moving qi (life force energy) with your hands in a seemingly effortless way. The practice may not burn a thousand calories an hour, but it builds flexibility, which can help prevent injuries and balance problems in the long run.

Work out in groups

Solitary workouts may be a U.S. standard, but the Chinese emphasize being together. In China, fitness is a shared experience. Public squares and sometimes even street corners become studios for ballroom dancing or square dancing. The local people make fitness social, with participants helping each other stick with a fitness routine.

Make it fun

Playing jianzi is a workout? To the Chinese, yes. When playing jianzi, players aim to keep a weighted shuttlecock off the ground using any part of their bodies, except their arms and hands, enough of an effort to get players breathing hard and using muscles many of us have long forgotten. And they really enjoy themselves. Experts say picking one or more fitness routines you enjoy helps you stick with a healthy lifestyle.

You don't need to be a gearhead

We Americans love our gear, and not having the right gadget, shoes, or clothes can become an excuse for not going to a workout. In China, every city has many pieces of fitness equipment in public parks. Many residents build workouts into their daily life, stopping off for light training with the fitness equipment during lunch break or on their walks after dinner. Chinese people don't wait for the right gear; they just get moving.

Unit project

Writing a letter to the International Olympic Committee regarding the size of the Olympic Games

The size of the Olympic Games has been an interesting topic for sports lovers. Some of them hope to see new sports events constantly added to the Games while others argue that the size should be reduced rather than increased. What is your opinion? In this unit project, you are going to write a letter to the International Olympic Committee regarding the size of the Olympic Games.

Step 1 Divide the class into four groups. Two groups support the idea of increasing the size of the Olympic Games while the other two support the idea of reducing the size.

Step 2 After class, work with your group members to do research and collect supporting materials for your viewpoint. Each group should come up with at least four reasons to support your viewpoint. Then each group writes a letter of 300-400 words to the International Olympic Committee, suggesting either increasing or reducing the size of the Olympic Games.

Step 3 In the next class, read your letter to the class. Then the whole class vote for the most convincing letter.
